From the President

Scott A. Bailey

Texas Lutheran University

Greetings and welcome to the 56th annual convention of the Southwestern Psychological Association. It has been an honor and pleasure to participate in the planning of this event. The growth and momentum of SWPA are most encouraging.

Our program is rich with interesting invited addresses, papers, posters, symposia, presentations on effective teaching, and continuing education workshops. To be sure, the breadth and depth of the program is crucially linked to the participation of our affiliate organizations: SCPA, SAMR, Psi Chi, and TPA. I hope that your experience here leaves you with expanded understandings of basic and applied human and nonhuman behavior.

For two years, members of SWPA have produced a quarterly electronic newsletter. The goal for the newsletter is to highlight the interesting work people are doing in the region. Please help us remain aware of the host of things that you are doing. If you or someone you know has a program of research, a project of particular interest, or anything that you think merits inclusion in the newsletter, please submit a description of it so that we may work it into the queue.

The annual conference is the focal event for our organization. The newsletter and webpage (www.swpsych.org) are great tools for disseminating information relevant to psychologists and students of psychology. Shortly after the conference has ended an electronic survey will be sent to every registrant; please take a few moments when you get it to help ensure that your interests are appropriately represented in the 2011 San Antonio conference program, and in our newsletter and webpage.

Enjoy the convention!

State Representative Invited Speaker Symposia

In 2009, SWPA instituted a special set of symposia coordinated by our elected state representatives during the second year of their two-year terms. The state representatives organize their symposia by inviting faculty and other esteemed professionals from around the region and the nation. The state symposia in the 2010 program were organized by the representatives from Missouri and Louisiana. The intent of these symposia is to further enhance the level of research presented at our annual convention.

Acknowledgements

We also gratefully acknowledge the generosity of the Boards of Scientific Affairs and Education of the American Psychological Association for their contributions toward the SWPA Social event and underwriting of the Harry Kirke Wolfe Lecture.

Audio-Visual Policy

SWPA will provide computer, projector, and screen for the Invited speakers presenting in Ballroom E. SWPA will provide a screen and electrical power cords in all other meeting rooms where members present papers, workshops, or symposia. If members need any other audio-visual equipment, they are responsible for making their own arrangements and payment.

The security and storage of any equipment brought to the meeting site is the sole responsibility of the individual bringing or renting the equipment for the meeting. SWPA is not responsible for the security and storage of equipment brought to the meeting site by private arrangement.

Reaching the Animal Mind

Operant conditioning using secondary reinforcers as event markers—otherwise known as clicker training—is revolutionizing animal care. Paraplegics and blind people train their own service dogs. Children as young as nine can teach the new puppy punishment-free games that prevent nipping and jumping up. Zoo trainers teach ALL the animals, from tigers and giraffes to birds and reptiles, to cooperate in their own medical care, including voluntary blood draws. The human version, called TAG teaching, speeds up skills acquisition in sports, physical therapy, language, music, and for people with special needs including autism. Karen Pryor, author of Don't Shoot the Dog and, recently, Reaching the Animal Mind, will take us on a visual tour of new apps of an old science. See how you might use it yourself!

Will be followed by a conversation hour at 11:30 AM

Recovering our Common Sense: Psychology as an Observation Oriented Science

Since the early 1900s psychological research has been dominated by statistical methods that are overly abstract and often ill-suited for the types of questions most psychologists wish to ask. In this presentation, Observation Oriented Modeling will be introduced as a radical alternative to these traditional methods of data analysis. Observation Oriented Modeling challenges researchers to develop integrated models that explain patterns of observations rather than estimate abstract population parameters. The focus of research is thus shifted away from aggregate statistics and is instead directed toward assessing the accuracy of judgments based on the observations in hand. This shift brings the persons in a psychological study to the forefront of the analysis and conclusions, while completely eschewing such confusing concepts as Type I, Type II, Type III errors, statistical power, and the p-value.

Developmental and Neurobiological Consequences of Selective Breeding for Recovery from Incentive Downshift

A selective breeding protocol was implemented for the recovery from a type of incentive downshift, consummatory successive negative contrast (cSNC). cSNC is a procedure in which rats given free access to 32% sucrose show a sharp suppression of drinking behavior after a downshift to 4% sucrose, compared to rats that always receive 4% sucrose. Suppression of drinking is followed by a gradual recovery of drinking behavior to the control level. We found differences in the isolation-induced positive vocalizations, in which pups in the two selected lines, L and H, emitted a lower number of high-frequency vocalizations (around 50 kHz) than pups in the control line (R). Furthermore, rats in the H line showed less sensitivity to the naloxone manipulation during incentive downshift compared to rats in the L and R lines. These results suggest that selective breeding for recovery from reward downshift results in a complex set of phenotypic changes that include modifications during the development. At least some of these effects may be mediated by changes in the effectiveness of opioid receptors.

Teaching Students What They Don't Want to Learn

Effective teaching has always been more than filling students' heads with information. However, teaching becomes particularly challenging when students walk into the classroom with information, beliefs, and attitudes that are incompatible with the ideas to be learned. In this situation, teaching must address the task of changing students' minds rather than filling them. In this talk, I will discuss a variety of social influence techniques that can be used in a classroom setting to change students' minds and attitudes, especially students' beliefs in pseudoscientific and paranormal phenomenon.

Psychology is a Science: Engaging Students in the Research Process

In part to address problems concerning the lay public's ignorance of the true nature of psychology as a scientific endeavor, the APA has included in its Guidelines for the Undergraduate Psychology Major a call not only to convey this knowledge base to students (Goal 1), but also to teach students to understand the methods we use to gain this knowledge (Goal 2) and to think critically and skeptically (Goal 3) about it. Thus one of my primary learning objectives in teaching psychology to undergraduates at any level is to provide the tools for understanding and evaluating that body of knowledge, as well as the representations of it and other scientific data in the popular media. This year's H.K. Wolfe Lecture will focus on a) teaching basic and advanced research designs through the use of news media, movie plots, and my own research in Ethiopia; b) active participation in the research process using computer-based experiments, public data bases, and untapped sources such as cemeteries and zoos; and c) helping students search for alternative explanations to foregone conclusions.

The Changing Face of Applied Psychology

Professions are seldom static and are frequently in a state of flux with some subcomponents constricting and new realms of practice blossoming. Psychology is no exception and events over the last ten years have resulted in unprecedented changes. Some changes over the last decade have been so dramatic that the very definition of psychology may have to change. This symposium will consider the rapid changes taking place in applied psychology across the country along with the implications for the future.

SWPA Presidential Address, 2010 Scott A. Bailey

Research suggests that with sufficient deliberate practice one can become proficient at nearly anything. Awareness of the tremendous potential for experience in honing capacity should shape how we approach scholarship. This talk will examine scientific data and anecdotal support of mechanisms that facilitate the development of capacities across a range of domains.

Dr. Scott Bailey is the Lillie Krause Professor of Social Science, and Chair of the Psychology Department at Texas Lutheran University. His research interests are in animal learning, behavioral neuroscience, and comparative psychology.

Fighting, Dying and Killing for One's Group: Nature and Consequences of Identity Fusion

Whereas most people draw a sharp division between their personal selves and the groups of which they are members, some people feel that their personal and group identities are fused. When people's personal and social selves become fused, they perceive the two to be functionally equivalent. As a result, they express willingness to engage in extraordinary behaviors in the service of their group membership, such as fighting, dying for the group, or even killing for the group. In one study, for example, persons who were fused with Spain endorsed plunging to their deaths in front of a speeding trolley to save the lives of fellow Spaniards. The nature and implications of identity fusion will be discussed.
